Detailed Description of Grant Proposal

The demand for food assistance has skyrocketed as COVID-19 has impacted life and jobs. Many families have visited a food shelf for the first time ever. Food shelves have faced new constraints with social distancing and fewer volunteers. At the same time, food donations from manufacturers have decreased significantly. To fill this gap, Second Harvest has had to and continues to purchase more food than usual to ensure families don't miss meals during this trying time. They have had to develop safer and more efficient ways to distribute food via pre-packed boxes and curbside pickup to honor social distancing. Also, they have developed new ways to distribute food in areas where families do not normally have access to a food shelf in their area.

Who is the "target community" being served?

The target community is those people who due to family economic conditions need assistance in having a safe, sufficient supply of food for their family. The number of people in need of food assistance in the metro area has quickly grown in the last few months.
